

Vultures

Words and Music © 2017 by Jamie McElman
Mountain Rise Music, All Rights Reserved

Took a shot to the ego
I lost my place in the line
Ended up at the side of the road
With the crush of humanity passing by.

I don't know what I don't know
Allow me to hazard a try
Shadows moving above me wherever I go
One look up'll tell you why.

~Chorus~

There's vultures up there
Short on mercy, they'll pick your bones
There's vultures up there
Lick your wounds, and head on home.

I've been thinking on friendship
An' I guess there are really two kinds
Those who love you 'til the end of the earth
Without question or reason why.

Then from out of the half light
Come those just drawn to your shine
Yeah they're yours while you're standing on top
As soon as you falter, they'll say goodbye.

~cho~

~Bridge~

You can't depend on your fair weather friends
To be anyone other than them
It isn't a loss, and it isn't the end
Happiness comes from within.

There's no re-beginning
With people there's no second try
Cherish the ones who make you feel good
And pay no mind to the other kind.

And while I'm standing here preaching
I'm listening at the same time
A lifetime of learning to take my advice
Now I don't really care.

~cho~

There's vultures up there
Short on mercy, they'll pick your bones
There's vultures up there
Smile and wave, and head on home.
There's vultures up there